What is the consignatiekas and am I entitled to money from the consignatiekas?

The consignatiekas is a consignment fund containing money that has been entrusted to the Ministry of Finance for safekeeping. This concerns money of which it is unknown who is entitled to it or of which it is unknown whether the entitled party wishes to receive the money.

Entitlement to money from the consignment fund

Do you wish to check whether you might be entitled to a disbursement from the consignment fund? This can be done via the consignatiekas search form. You must be able to prove that you have a claim. You must also send a number of documents together with your application.

The origin of the money in the consignment fund

The consignment fund includes among other things:

- the equivalent value in money of unclaimed securities;
- money from expropriation proceedings;
- a claim in the event of a bankruptcy;
- money from administered estates (inheritances);
- money from debt rescheduling.

Depositing money in the consignment deposit fund is subject to various rules.

Period of limitation on consignment deposits

The Ministry of Finance keeps consignment deposits dating from 1980 onwards in custody for a period of 20 years. For consignment deposits dating from before 1980 and for consignment deposits up to € 45.38, the period of limitation is 60 years.

Interest on consignment deposits

For consignment deposits of € 45.38 and above, you will receive simple interest on the disbursement. That means that you will receive no interest on the interest of previous years. You will receive interest over the period starting from the month after making a consignment deposit up to and including the month preceding disbursement. You will not receive any interest for portions of a calendar month.

The ministry sets the interest rate on a yearly basis. The interest rate is based on the average of the prevailing interest rates at that time for demand deposit accounts at the major banks.

Submitting a claim

The 'consignatiekas' and the 'consignatiekas tegoeden Tweede Wereldoorlog' (two consignment funds, one specifically for Second World War assets) only contain money. Accordingly no goods are included. Anyone that wishes to make a claim to a disbursement must satisfy certain conditions.

Submitting a claim on a sum of money from the consignment fund

Are you considering claiming a sum of money from the consignment fund? If you are, you can search for this via the consignment fund search form. You must be able to prove that you are entitled to the consigned sum of money. No administration costs will be charged.

Documents to send together with the claim

You must in any case send the following documents:

- A copy of a recent proof of identity of the entitled party.
- Where applicable: an original declaration proving the authority to act on behalf of the entitled party.
- Documents which prove the right to a disbursement. Depending on the nature of the consignment, this could be for example:
 - an original share, proof of registration in the share register;
 - a copy of a claim submitted in the past;
 - a certificate of inheritance;
 - a last will and testament.

- Companies/banks filing declarations or a request for disbursement must submit a recent original extract from the register of the Chamber of Commerce. This must show that the person who has signed the declaration or the request for disbursement is authorised to do so.
- You must indicate to which bank account any eventual disbursement can be transferred. You must also state your name, address and place of residence.
